Coming out of its ashes...

The Journal of Contemporary Dental Practice (JCDP) was started by a group of professionals in 1999. The JCDP has published hundreds of peer-reviewed articles, including original researches, case studies, reviews, regarding all aspects of dentistry that provide new information to dentists, dental hygienists, assistants and dental technicians from 1999 till 2010. This new information helps clinicians to excel their daily practice.

Because of the outstanding efforts of journal's management team, reviewers and authors, the JCDP has reached clinicians in more than 100 countries in the world. It was indexed in PubMed [freely accessible database of The National Center for Biotechnology Information (NCBI) and the US National Library of Medicine (NLM)], which makes the recognition of this journal wider.

In 2010, global financial crisis affected the JCDP's daily operations as well and it discontinued its life. However, Jaypee Brothers Medical Publishers took over the journal in 2011. A strong editorial board with many well-known professionals from several countries has been established immediately. Jaypee Brothers Medical Publishers and the JCDP editors have agreed to continue the JCDP's tradition, which is rapid publication of strong articles from all over the world.

We, Editorial Board Members and Reviewers, ask your help and feedback to make the JCDP even stronger. The JCDP will continue to publish strong articles regarding all aspects of dentistry in order to improve dental practice in the world. Our mission is to provide peer-reviewed state-of-the-art information and establish a meaningful platform for professionals who involved in oral health care in contributing to quality dental literature.

I appreciate the readers for their support and feedback that have and will help us to carry the JCDP into a sublime future. I also thank those who involved in the daily reviews, operations and publishing.

The Journal of Contemporary Dental Practice is coming out of its ashes even stronger...
